Visiting Kierkegaard's Grave Noel Monahan

A sense of doom hovers about your name,
Kierkegaard, a Danish word for churchyard,
Aloof in childhood, burdened by sorrow,
Frightened by an Old Testament God
That hooked you to the nails on the cross.

You searched inside your soul for months, years ...
Discovered a new song, a leap in the dark,
A call to take chances, to walk alone.

A call that now drives me away from the crowd
To walk sidewalk after sidewalk, past kirks, canals ...
And stand at your graveside in Copenhagen.

Time holds you darkly in this secret place,
Hidden in trees, covered in October leaves,
Kierkegaard, at one with your name at last.

*Eternal rest grant on to them, O Lord,
