The Memory of a Hand by Joyce Rupp

Her feathery hand in mine, delicate onion skin wrapped around a hundred years of bone, purple veins bulging through the spotted coverlet of age-formed blotches, each arthritic joint rubbing across my still-straight fingers.

But what I remember most is not the shape, the form, the weightlessness of that precious hand with its long, crooked fingers.

What remains is the touch of love formed long ago in friendship unweathered by the extensive years, the clasp of her soft hand in mine, tender and warm.
