Clearances

Fear of affection made her affect inadequacy whenever it came to pronouncing words 'beyond her'.
Bertold Brek.

She'd manage something hampered and askew every time, as if she might betray the hampered and inadequate by too well-adjusted a vocabulary.
With more challenge than pride, she'd tell me,
'You know all them things.'

So I governed my tongue in front of her, a genuinely well-adjusted adequate betrayal of what I knew better.
I'd naw and aye and decently relapse into the wrong grammar which kept us allied and at bay.

The cool that came off sheets just off the line made me think the damp must still be in them but when I took my corners of the linen and pulled against her, first straight down the hem and then diagonally, then flapped and shook the fabric like a sail in a cross-wind, they made a dried-out undulating thwack.

So we'd stretch and fold and end up hand to hand for a split second as if nothing had happened, for nothing had that had not always happened beforehand, day by day, just touch and go, coming close again by holding back in moves where I was x and she was o inscribed in sheets she'd sewn from ripped-out flour sacks.
