A Dream of Jealousy    *by Seamus Heaney

Walking with you and another lady in wooded parkland, the whispering grass ran its fingers through our guessing silence
and the trees opened into a shady unexpected clearing where we sat down.
I think the candour of the light dismayed us.
We talked about desire and being jealous,
our conversation a loose single gown
or a white picnic tablecloth spread out like a book of manners in the wildness.
'Show me,' I said to our companion,
'what I have much coveted, your breast's mauve star.'
And she consented.
O neither these verses nor my prudence, love,
can heal your wounded stare.
